The United States Armed Forces Receive the 2006 Ford Medal for Distinguished Public Service

The Gerald R. Ford Medal for Distinguished Public Service is awarded annually to an individual or entity that has served the public good in the private and public sector. The criteria for the recipient are based on characteristics that President Ford demonstrated throughout his long and distinguished public service career. They include courage; strength of character; diligence; determination in the face of adversity; compassion and integrity; all of which are exemplified by our Armed Forces.

In making the 2006 award, President Ford spoke directly to the Armed Forces, "In my life, I have received countless honors. Among the greatest of these was the opportunity to wear the uniform of the Lieutenant Commander in the United States Navy. On an aircraft carrier in the South Pacific during World War II, I learned to respect and to rely on comrades as if my life depended on them—because it often did. In civilian life, I was to receive the greatest honor that can come to any American—one magnified by the privilege of serving as Commander in Chief of the bravest, most decent, most professional fighting force the world has ever known.

Thirty years on, America's armed forces remain a principled and compassionate military force to be reckoned with. You fight to secure free and democratic elections in Iraq and Afghanistan. You fight waves of disease and heartbreak in the wake of a murderous tsunami. You fight for the future of hurricane victims on America's Gulf Coast. You fight to protect our borders, and to assist friends half a world away, as we witnessed recently in the Philippines. Above all, through your personal sacrifice and dauntless courage, you make America safer, and the world more free.

As a World War II veteran, I yield to no one in my admiration for the heroes of Omaha Beach and Iwo Jima. At the same time, I take enormous inspiration from their grandsons and granddaughters who are writing new chapters of heroism in the back alleys of Baghdad and the rugged mountains of Afghanistan. We owe you so much; no medal can adequately express our gratitude, or convey our admiration. But to me it is a source of both pride and humility to know that a medal bearing my name will be permanently associated with your valor.

God bless you all. And may God bless America."

Letter from the Director

It is a pleasure to provide an update on the wonderful scope of activities we have had at the Gerald R. Ford Presidential Library and Museum during this 25th anniversary year. With speakers like Steve Ford, Bob Woodward, James Galloway and David Hume Kennerly, we have drawn capacity crowds to attend superb programs coupled with outstanding exhibits like Teddy Roosevelt, Requiem and Prime Time Presidents. As you will see elsewhere in this issue, we have another strong line-up of speakers and exhibits for the coming year, starting with General Brent Scowcroft opening a new Art of Diplomacy exhibit at the Library, and followed by Steve Ford, Henry Kissinger and Richard Norton Smith at the Museum.

The Library and Museum staff is first rate, and this is amply demonstrated by the quality of our exhibits and public programs, the scope of archival research carried out at the Library, and the success of new outreach programs to bring more students to see Museum exhibits and use primary source materials at the Library. Museum attendance is up 33% over last year, and research use of the Library has increased more than 300% in the last five years. New initiatives to present lobby exhibits and speakers at the Library have been very well received in the Ann Arbor community, and we now have a cadre of "regulars" just as we do at the Museum.

Details regarding specific programs and events are featured on other pages within this newsletter, but I wanted to highlight several notable gifts to the Gerald R. Ford Foundation:

- ▶ Peter and Joan Secchia and the Secchia Family Foundation made a gift to underwrite busing of school children to visit the Ford Museum. Their contribution made a significant difference in Museum attendance and sparked creation of a special endowment within the Foundation to provide ongoing support, an effort being ably led by Ambassador Secchia.
- ▶ The Boone Pickens Foundation and the Communities Foundation of Texas Fund donated $1 million this spring to be added to our restricted temporary exhibit fund, to provide ongoing support for feature exhibitions and educational programming at the Ford Museum. These funds will enable us to further enhance the quality and scope of special exhibits to draw even more visitors to the Museum.
- ▶ Leonore Annenberg and the Annenberg Foundation gave an unrestricted gift of $500,000 this spring in honor of President Ford, to support the educational mission of the G.R. Ford Foundation. In addition, we have just received a commitment for another $500,000 gift to be given in the spring of 2007, this one in honor of President Ford's 93rd birthday on July 14, 2006.

Each of these gifts will have a very significant impact on our ability to provide quality programs, exhibits and outreach to school children and the scholarly community, and we are most grateful for this support for our mission.

The Library and Museum website (www.fordlibrary-museum.gov) has a new look, and continues to be enhanced every month. This spring, the site was selected for special recognition by the 2006 Webby Awards conducted by The International Academy of Digital Arts & Sciences, often referred to as the Academy Awards of web design. Special thanks go to Susan Ford Bales and Bill Brockett, a Ford family friend and former White House staff member, who generously volunteered to redesign the site through his company foto-grafics.com in Kalispell, Montana.

Thank you for your support for the Gerald R. Ford Foundation and for the Library and Museum. It is our honor to fulfill the mission of this great institution. We owe deep thanks to Marty Allen for all of his efforts as Chairman, and look forward to working with both Marty and Jack Ford in the years ahead.

President Ford Awards and Tributes:

▶ University of Michigan Distinguished Alumni Service Award, October 6, 2005. President Ford was one of six individuals to receive the 2005 service award.

▶ Michigan Walk of Fame, downtown Lansing, Michigan, May 25, 2006. President Ford and eleven other Michigan natives were honored with an award and an individual bronze plaque embedded in the sidewalks of Michigan's state capitol.

▶ 2006 Dick Enberg Award. President Ford received this prestigious award from the College Sports Information Directors of America for promoting the values of education and academics while furthering the meaning of the student-athlete.

SCENES AND EXCERPTS FROM PRESIDENT FORD'S WASHINGTON AND THE WORLD: A NARA TRIBUTE TO PRESIDENT FORD

Richard Norton Smith, historian, biographer and former director of the Ford Library and Museum, moderated the panel discussion, which was filmed and broadcast by C-SPAN.

BILL SCRANTON:

"In 1976, President Ford decided that we should change our policy [toward South Africa]. Henry ...gave a very good speech... in which he told...all of Africa and all of the world that America was changing and that we were going to support those "front" states and no longer support apartheid in South Africa. There has been very little reference to any of this that I have found among historians or commentators or columnists or media in general. They seem to have ignored it. I offer to you that this is one of the finest achievements of President Ford."

HENRY KISSINGER:

"He took very strong decisions, calmly, undramatically. Nobody ever questioned who was in charge. Nobody questioned was he up to it.... He deserves huge credit not for simply calming the country, which was important, but also for strong leadership and in my view for laying the basis for many of the revolutionary international developments that came afterwards."

Archivist of the United States Allen Weinstein introduced the program at the National Archives on June 19, 2006, followed by opening remarks by Ambassador Bill Scranton.

JIM CANNON:

DAVID GERGEN:

"What's important about President Ford was he was not only there during a period of tension, but it was the quality of governance and the quality of personal integrity that he brought to the job ... [he] reached out across the aisle."

We remember those days as ones which people, as divided as they were—there was an attempt to make the system work. And I think he held the country together during that time in ways that have now—because of the bitterness we've seen today we don't see people do that in the way that he did."

CARLA HILLS:

"I think history will look back on the last century and put President Ford at the top of the list of those who contributed a great deal, maybe the most, to this country. He led in war, he led in economic crises, he led in constitutional turmoil and he made the right decision. He knew, when he took decisions—many of them—some economic, the Pardon of Richard Nixon we've mentioned, that it was taking a political toll. And when his advisors said to him "this will hurt your re-election, he responded he wanted to do the right thing. But he didn't just say it, he did it. I think he is a man deserving of enormous plaudits, enormous gratitude from this country."

"He was the right person in a necessary place at the right time. The country was fortuitous to have him be there at the right time. The history of our country suggests to me anyway that in a time of crisis we produced a man we needed to bring us out of that crisis. I think this happened, for example, with Franklin D. Roosevelt, with Abraham Lincoln and I think it happened with Jerry Ford."

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

Performances by Teddy Roosevelt impersonator Ted Zalewski supplemented the TR exhibit.

The Museum opened Teddy Roosevelt: A Singular Life, curated by the staff for exclusive showing in Grand Rapids.

"For the Teddy Roosevelt exhibit, his life fascinated me. He loved to hunt wildlife, and the animals that are in the exhibit are so beautiful. How he used to be just an ill child growing up, and become the President of the United States amazes me."

—Bryon Center Public Schools 8th grader

Noted historian H. W. Brands opened the exhibit with a talk on Teddy Roosevelt in conjunction with War and Empire, a conference co-sponsored with Grand Valley State University's Hauenstein Center for the Presidency.

TR exhibit attendance by area school groups jumped dramatically due to a generous travel grant from Foundation Trustee Peter Secchia.

"Thank you so much for offering our students the invaluable experience of touring the Teddy Roosevelt exhibit. It was an absolutely wonderful day; one which provoked excellent class discussion upon our return. None of this would have been possible without the Secchia Family Foundation money to pay for the buses."

—Sparta High School teacher

Dr. Yanek Mieczkowski spoke at both the Library in Ann Arbor and the Museum in Grand Rapids about his new book, Gerald R. Ford and the Challenges of the 1970s. Filmed by C-SPAN

The 1,000th visitor to the Library's exhibit Play Ball, Mr. President, Ann Arbor resident Ann Walton, with Director Didier and exhibit curator Ken Hafeli.

High school class visits contributed to a record-breaking fall semester in the Library's educational programs.

PROGRAM H

Attendees mingled within the Library's exhibit of Ford White House holiday memorabilia.

Former White House Social Secretary Maria Downs visited the Library in Ann Arbor and the Museum in Grand Rapids to speak about Ford White House Christmases and the social events hosted by President and Mrs. Ford, in conjunction with holiday exhibits at each site.

Prime Time Presidents, depicting 11 American presidents interacting with television, ran for six months at the Library in Ann Arbor.

Steve Ford, President Ford's youngest son, opened Prime Time Presidents with a delightful talk about the pleasures and hazards of constant media attention on members of First Families. Filmed by C-SPAN.

While at the Library, Steve Ford ran into an old friend in the research room—David Hume Kennerly, noted photojournalist and President Ford's personal White House photographer.

CNN's Dr. Sanjay Gupta took his FIT NATION Town Hall to the University of Michigan, where it was web cast from the Ford Library.
